Prior work has shown that using a single speaker, the visual and audio conditions may not be reliable enough for providing high-quality video ads. For example, a tweet that includes exclamation point at $60^{th}$-frame might still be considered a positive sentiment. With the proposed framework, we can jointly learn the camera-view video sentiment polarity and the content latent factors simultaneously to predict the quality of a video ad. We evaluate the proposed model on a publicly available dataset which are captured from multiple sources, including internet search engine, social networking websites, mobile and desktop apps. Our experiment results show that the video sentiment polarity

An Imagenoth app allows you to create amazing photoshopped images With great power, you sometimes also have great responsibility. In this Photoshop tutorial, we'll show you how to use the Clone Stamp to repair a fractured photo. In order to repair a fractured photo, we first need to create a new image of the original image. To do this, first create a new document (File > New) and call it FracturedPhoto. Then load the image you want to repair, as shown below. Select the Rectangular Selection tool and click on the photo you want to repair. You'll notice that the area you've selected has turned blue, which means that it's exactly where you've clicked. To remove that blue, you must first deselect the area. Double-click anywhere in the image to deselect your selection. Move the crosshair cursor to the area you want to repair, and double-click again to deselect the area. Right click on the image and choose Edit > Clone Stamp, and you'll see the selection thumbnail at the bottom of your work area. From the drop-down menu, choose Fill Color, and choose a color that represents the photo. Double-click the brush you've selected from the drop-down menu, and you'll see that the the width and opacity of the stroke have been set to approximate the width and opacity of the blue rectangle at the bottom of the image. Move the crosshair cursor to the area of the image you want to repair, and click and drag to select the area. (You may need to let go of the mouse button if you're dragging down) To paste the pixels you just selected into the new document, hold the Ctrl key down. Then double-click anywhere in the new document to paste it, and release the Ctrl key. Duplicate the layer and fill with a different color. This will represent the new area of the photo.
